How is the magnitude of an earthquake determined? Earthquakes are recorded by a seismographic network. Each seismic station in the network measures the movement of the ground at the site. The slip of one block of rock over another in an earthquake releases energy that makes the ground vibrate. Most of what we know about the interior of the Earth comes from the study of seismic waves from earthquakes. Seismic waves from large earthquakes pass throughout the Earth. As seismic waves pass through the Earth, they are refracted, or bent, like rays of light bend when they pass though a glass prism. In fact, no correlation with weather has been found. piece of ground, causing it to vibrate, and thus the energy travels out from the earthquake in a wave. The S -wave is slower but larger than the P-wave and does most of the damage. Find out about the latest earthquakes in the United States (and the world) at the USGS and we've been tracking them for a very long time.
